4Q25 Recap: Schizophrenia Ph2 On-Track for 3Q26; Cobenfy's ADEPT Data in 2026 Will Be Critical for MPLT's Prospects in ADP

Summary

We remain Buy-Rated on MPLT following an in-line 4Q update. Most importantly, ph2 data for ML-007C-MA is on track for topline readout in 3Q26. As we see it, the M1/M4 mechanism is de-risked by Cobenfy, but we're still hoping to see confirmation of efficacy, with the potential to differentiate on at least one of tolerability/safety or dosing (once-daily). Meanwhile, MPLT's ph2 ADP program is still on track for 2H27--BMJ's ph3 ADEPT study readouts coming in 2026 should have significant readthrough here, and in ADP there's a path for MPLT to differentiate with BID dosing and lack of fasting requirements. Elsewhere, we're also expecting topline for ML-004 in an exploratory ph2 study in ASD, and MPLT also announced ML-005, their next-gen M1/M4 with potential for LAI formulation.

Key Points

MPLT's ML-007C-MA remains on track with ph2 POC data in Schizophrenia expected in 3Q26. Recall ML-007C-MA consists of a co-formulation of an M1/M4 agonist (ML-007) with a peripheral anticholinergic (fesoterodine). Leveraging the same mechanistic rationale as KRTX (later acquired by BMJ) partially de-risks efficacy in schizophrenia and gives us confidence in their upcoming ph2 data. What differentiates MPLT from KarXT is ML-007C-MA's potentially improved tolerability (due to better PK matching between cholinergic and anti-cholinergics) and easier dosing paradigm (potential for QD, no food effect, and shorter titration)--important factors when treating schizophrenia patients where compliance is a significant treatment hurdle. The ph2 ZEPHYR, similar to Cobenfy's ph2, is potentially registrational and will be using the PANSS score at 5wk as its primary endpoint. MPLT expects to reach target enrollment (n=300) in April with topline results expected 3Q26.

Meanwhile, ML-007C-MA received fast-track designation for ADP earlier this year with a ph2 readout expected 2H27. ML-007C-MA is also being developed for ADP, where we remain confident M1/M4 agonists should have a reasonable shot at working based on prior xanomeline data, and other supportive results for atypical antipsychotics in ADP. We're hoping for further corroboration of M1/M4's potential in ADP with Cobenfy's ph3 ADEPT studies--ADEPT-2 data are expected in 2026 alongside results of two other ADP studies (ADEPT-1 and ADEPT-4). Success here would have positive readthrough to MPLT's ADP study; however, we note that tolerability of muscarinics in this elderly patient population can be challenging, and one question for Cobenfy is whether they can retain enough patients at a high enough dose. Thus, there is significant potential readthrough to MPLT on these data, though the specific details will be key (and how we interpret the details of the Cobenfy ADP data will also be informed by how MPLT's compound looks in schizophrenia, which could come first).

Elsewhere, ML-004's topline ph2 data readout is expected in 3Q26--providing optionality on top of the schizophrenia data. ML-004 (5-HT1B/1D agonist) is an IR/ER reformulation of zolmitriptan--an old drug approved for as-needed treatment of migraine headaches. Ph1 data demonstrated MPLT's reformulation has improved the drug's safety/tolerability--allowing MPLT to dose at a higher dose than the original formulation which could lead to greater efficacy. Ph2 data in Autism Spectrum Disorder expected in 3Q26, which in our view provides optionality on top of the schizophrenia data (though we are conservative in ascribing credit here). Lastly, MPLT also shared the expansion of their pipeline with ML-005, a next-generation M1/M4 muscarinic agonist with potentially greater potency that is also amenable to LAI formulation. MPLT plans to advance this into IND-enabling studies in 2026.

MPLT ended 4Q25 with $453.1MM in cash and equivalents, which is expected to fund operations through 2027

Investment Thesis

We rate MPLT shares Buy. MapLight Therapeutics is a clinical-stage biotechnology company focused on developing drugs for neuropsychiatric disorders. Our bullish thesis on MPLT is predicated on the potential of ML-007C-MA, a co-formulated drug consisting of the M1/M4 muscarinic agonist ML-007 and peripheral anticholinergic fesoterodine. MPLT's ongoing ph2 in schizophrenia is de-risked by KarXT's prior success leveraging a similar mechanism, though MPLT is also pursuing a ph2 in Alzheimer's disease psychosis where KarXT clinical data are still upcoming. Despite MPLT entering several years behind KarXT in an already crowded schizophrenia market, the "bar" for success is low and we've seen blockbuster sales for prior antipsychotics with minimal differentiation. In our view, less frequent dosing may be sufficient in itself for prescribers to select ML-007C-MA over KarXT, especially in ADP where KarXT's thrice daily dosing can be cumbersome. Ultimately, though, this is CNS and good drugs with strong scientific rationale can still fail in clinical trials, but we think the risk/reward is upside-biased for this stock.

Target Price Methodology/Risks

We derive a $28 target price for MPLT shares based on our DCF analysis. Our DCF uses an 11% discount rate and 0% terminal growth rate, aligned with other similar-stage companies in our coverage universe. In our model, we risk-adjust MPLT revenues in SCZ and ADP at 50% and 20%, respectively, which reflects the level of scientific rationale and de-risking clinical data generated to date. We view both the SCZ and ADP as significant commercial opportunities if MPLT is successful. Our terminal growth rate of 0% takes into consideration the longer DCF forecast period extending up to 2038 which may be close to capturing peak sales of ML-007C-MA.

There are many risks to an investment in MapLight Therapeutics, including clinical, regulatory, and commercial risks, as well as the risk of a dilutive equity offering. Specifically, MPLT investors face the risk that ML-007C-MA and other pipeline programs could fail in clinical trials, be impacted by a safety setback, and/or be unable to achieve FDA approval. Beyond clinical trial and regulatory risks, MapLight, like other biotechnology companies, faces significant commercial risks due to competition, pressure from insurers, and/or a variety of other factors. Any of the above variables could impact the stock and our target price significantly.

Company Description

MapLight Therapeutics, Inc is a clinical-stage biopharmaceutical company focused on advancing multiple drug candidates for neuropsychiatric disorders. Their lead candidate, ML-007C-MA, is a combination of a CNS-penetrant procholinergic compound with a peripherally-restricted anticholinergic compound to mitigate side effects, similar to KarXT. ML-007C-MA is currently being evaluated for the treatment of both schizophrenia and Alzheimer's disease psychosis in separate ph2 studies. MapLight also has other drugs in the pipeline including ML-004 for sociability/irritability associated with Autism Spectrum Disorder.
